1. Opposing Attitudes towards Self-Castration as an Expression of Continence: Justin Martyr and Basil of Ancyra

In his Apology Justin Martyr tells how a young man in Alexandria petitioned the Roman prefect for permission to be castrated. Permission was denied, but Justin’s apologetical use and evident approval of the effort itself are striking. The youth intended, so Justin writes, to persuade non-Christians that sexual promiscuity was not a μυστήριον, or secret rite, among Christians, and he cites the incident to demonstrate that some Christians forgo marriage altogether and live completely in continence.

Written in the middle of the second century C.E., this is the earliest documentation of the impulse exhibited by certain early Christians towards self-castration as an expression of Christian chastity. Two centuries later Basil of Ancyra devoted several sections of his treatise On the True Integrity of Virginity (ca. 336-58) to the same practice. Unlike Justin, however, Basil hardly considers this evidence of a man’s continence: on the contrary, those who “perversely” castrate themselves “by this very deed make a declaration of their own licentiousness (ἀκολασία).” Our modern sensibilities may require no explanation for the shift from approval to disapproval of self-castration these two authors illustrate. Yet their testimony provokes basic...

---

1 Apol. 29,1-2, ed. E. Goodspeed, in Die ältesten Apologeten (Göttingen 1914) 45: Ἄλλ’ ἢ τὴν ἀρχὴν οὐκ ἐγαμώμεν, εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ παῖδων ἀνατρεψί, ἢ παρατιθέμενοι τὸ γῆμασθαί τέλεον ἐνεκρατεύομεθα. Καὶ ἔδρα τῶν ἡμετέρων, ύπερ τοῦ πείσα ὡς ὡς ὑπὸ οὐκ ἔστιν ἴμνιον μυστήριον ἢ ἀνέδοξην μίξις, βιβλιδίων ἀνέδοξην εἰ Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ Φήλικι ἠγεμονεύοντι, ἀξίων ἐπιτρέπει ιατρῷ τοῖς διδύμους αὐτοῦ ἀφελεῖν. Felix’s prefecture has been dated ca. 150-153.

2 H. Chadwick, The Sentences of Sextus (Texts and Studies 5; Cambridge 1959) 110.

3 De virg. 61 (PG 30, 793A): εαυτοῦ οὗτος ἥκητηρίασαν, αὐτῷ τῷ ἐργῷ ἀκολασίαν ἐαυτῶν μακρόθεν κατηγοροῦντες.
questions: Why did Basil consider it such a matter of concern, both in general and for the readers of his treatise in particular? or more simply,
What appeal was there for Justin’s youth and other Christians in such a dramatic act as self-castration?

The practice and prohibition of self-castration in early Christianity has only received passing historical notice in conjunction with studies of the interpretation of Matthew 19:12\(^4\) or the debate over Origen’s alleged self-castration.\(^5\) These studies, like the orthodox treatises from which the evidence must be drawn, tend to marginalize self-castration as a rare act on the “lunatic fringe”\(^6\) of early Christian asceticism. Their view needs modi-

\(^7\) De virg. 62 (797A): εἷς τὸ ἀναστείλαι πολλοῦς ἥδη τουούτος ἐπιπολάσσαντας τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ εὐνούχους.

\(^8\) Const. Apost. 8,47,21-24; Nicaean Council can. 1 (produced below, n. 47).

\(^9\) A. Vuibius, for example, while admitting in a footnote that Origen denies self-castration was a practice of Marcion’s followers, asserts in his main text that Marcionites “did not hesitate to mutilate their bodies” (History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient I [CSCO 184; Louvain 1958] 51 and n. 94), extrapolating from Tertullian’s somewhat vague remark (below, n. 35).
other influences (not necessarily by alliance to a heretical group), embraced radical corporeal asceticism as a fundamental part of Christian devotion. Moreover, the sources indicate that self-castration was sometimes adopted by male ascetics to allay suspicion which might otherwise arise from their living with female ascetics. Its prohibition was concomitant not only with a growing concern to determine acceptable ascetic practice, but acceptable social practices between ascetics as well: how avowed male and female virgins ought to associate with each other, and what outward signs should manifest their virginal status. In conclusion I will suggest that one reason for its condemnation was that castration proved an ambiguous signifier, since the continence (ἐγκράτεια) and self-control (σωφροσύνη) of the castrated Christian were not in fact made clear or guaranteed by this seemingly unambiguous form of bodily inscription.

2. Christian Eunuchs and Orthodox Praxis

Eunuchs were no new breed to the Roman empire of the Christian era. Castration had long been the physical mark of slavery (of slaves brought in from outside the empire)¹⁰ and of religious devotion in the so-called oriental cults.¹¹ Although Domitian and Nerva had banned castration within the borders of the empire and Hadrian had made it a capital offense for both castrator and castrated,¹² the laws evidently did not apply to those who had castrated themselves,¹³ and the practice continued, as it had for hundreds of years, among the “Galli” priests and devotees of Cybele (Magna Mater), Atargatis and the Scythian goddess. Ancient references to eunuchs express a general belief that eunuchs constituted a bizarre race of

---

¹⁰ K. Hopkins, Conquerors and Slaves (Sociological Studies in Roman History 1; Cambridge 1978), 172 n. 4 and p. 192; P. Guyot, Eunuchen als Sklaven und Freigelassene in der griechisch-römischen Antike (Stuttgarter Beiträge zur Geschichte und Politik 14: Stuttgart, 1980).
¹² Cass. Dio 67,2,3; 68,2,4; Suet. Domit. 7,1; Digest 48,8,4,2. Roman jurisprudence conceived castration as tantamount to murder and assimilated it to circumcision: see Digest 48,8,11,1. Their legal relationship is discussed by E. Smallwood, “The Legislation of Hadrian and Antoninus Pius against Circumcision,” Latomus 18 (1959) 334-47 and 20 (1961) 93-96.
¹³ A. Rousselle, in Pomeia: On Desire and the Body in Antiquity, trans. F. Pheasant (Cambridge, MA 1988) 126, observes that Roman law says nothing about anyone who se abscedit, se eviravit, and there is no testimony for its application to the Galli.
indeterminate gender. Most fundamentally, castration conferred a distinct mark of alterity upon the castrated. This milieu and perception of eunuchs must be taken into an account of the Christian practice of castration, in so far as it would not have been a wholly unthinkable (albeit radical) option for a man in the empire to choose as a means of setting himself apart from others, either religiously or socially, while at the same time following what he perceived to be the demands of his religion. We do not possess sources which reveal the significance of eunuchism in non-Christian devotion. The Christian sources, however, indicate that the figure of the eunuch provided early Christians with an emblem of extreme chastity, highlighting a sharp contrast in sexual conduct between Christians and pagans.

The apologists Justin and Athenagoras seized upon this figure and invested it with the virtue of sexual continence. This was not a virtue outsiders commonly associated with Christianity in the late second century. As a pagan critic remarks in Minucius Felix's Octavius (ca. 170-75),

They introduce everywhere a kind of religious lust, a promiscuous "brotherhood" and "sisterhood" by which ordinary fornication, under the cover of a hallowed name, is converted to incest.

16 While references to self-made Christian eunuchs are found in western (e.g., below, n. 68) as well as eastern texts, the evidence comes mostly from the east, especially the region of Phrygia (e.g. below, n. 31) where the rites of the Galli originated. This regional concentration suggests the non-Christian practice of self-castration was germane to the Christian, but only Basil of Ancyra specifically draws this link (below, n. 32). Nock (among others) believes pagans castrated themselves to ensure their ritual purity; against this view cf. Roussele, op. cit., 125-127. Seneca observes that Romans commonly attributed divinity to those who mutilate their bodies: cum aliquis secandi laecertos suae artex brachia aliqua unerum suspensa manu cruenta... divinum esse eum... affirmatis (De vita beata, 26,8, ed. L. Renoldes [Oxford 1977] 196), and Tertullian remarks that among pagans alia vis [i.e., a divine influence] pronuntiatur in eo qui genitalia vel lacertos... prosecat (Apol. 23,3; ed. H. Hoppe [CSEL 69; Wein 1939] 64).

17 Nock (among others) believes pagans castrated themselves to ensure their ritual purity; against this view cf. Roussele, op. cit., 125-127. Seneca observes that Romans commonly attributed divinity to those who mutilate their bodies: cum aliquis secandi laceratos sua artex brachia aliqua unerum suspensa manu cruenta... divinum esse eum... affirmatis (De vita beata, 26,8, ed. L. Renoldes [Oxford 1977] 196), and Tertullian remarks that among pagans alia vis [i.e., a divine influence] pronuntiatur in eo qui genitalia vel lacertos... prosecat (Apol. 23,3; ed. H. Hoppe [CSEL 69; Wein 1939] 64).

18 Oct. 9,2, ed. J. Beaujeu (Paris 1964) 12: se promise appellant frates et sorores, ut etiam non insolens stiuprum intercessione sacri nominis fiat incestum. For similar charges see, e.g., Justin Apol. 26,7; Dial. 10; Tatian, 25; Tertullian, Apol. 4,11; Origen, C.Cel. 6,40.
Of course, charges of sexual impropriety were regularly laid against fringe religious groups in Rome. Nonetheless by the late-second century Christian groups enjoying a revolutionary sense of social liberation by virtue of their baptism had sprung up there and elsewhere. From the group celibacy of the Encratites to the sexual libertinism reportedly espoused by such Egyptian groups as the Barbeliotes and Carpocrations, the communal interaction these Christian groups enjoyed challenged propriety by mingling male and female in close, if not sexual, proximity.

It was perhaps in response to suspicions of such groups that Justin Martyr and the young Alexandrian of his Apology felt the need to prove (one rhetorically, the other physically) that continence was indeed a Christian virtue both in theory and practice. Self-castration for them offered the clearest proof. About twenty years later (ca. 177), Athenagoras addressed an apology to Marcus Aurelius that employed the figure of the eunuch again to illustrate the fusion of Christian regard for chastity with practice:

You might find many among us, both men and women, growing old and unmarried in the hope of living more closely with God. But if remaining in virginity and the state of a eunuch draws one nearer to God, while the indulgence of carnal thoughts and desires leads one away, then all the more do we abstain from doing that which we avoid thinking about. For our interests lie not in the study of words, but in the display and teaching of deeds.

In stark contrast to such Christian “eunuchs” Athenagoras inveighs against those pagans who have set up a market for fornication... outraging all the noblest and fairest bodies in all sorts of ways, dishonoring God's fair craftsmanship.... These adulterers and pederasts defame [our] eunuchs and once-married.

In this early apology Athenagoras presents the figure of the eunuch in terms that were to become accepted in orthodox Christianity—not as a

---

19 In the didaskaleia of such teachers as Marcion, Tatian and Valentinus: Brown, op. cit., 86-91.
20 See below, n. 53.
21 Leg. pro Christ. 33,2-4, ed. B. Pouderon (SC 379; Paris 1992) 196-98: Εύροις δ’ ἄν πολλοὺς τῶν παρ’ ἡμῖν καὶ ἀνδρᾶς καὶ γυναικῶν καταχωρόσκοντας ἀγάμους ἐλπίδι τοῦ μάλλον συνέσχεσθαι τῷ θεῷ. Εἰ δὲ τὸ ἐν παρθενίᾳ καὶ ἐν ἐυνοοχίᾳ μεῖναι, μάλλον παρίστησι τῷ θεῷ, τὸ δὲ μέχρις ἐννοοῖας καὶ ἐπιθυμίας ἐλθέν ἀπάγει; ἂν τὰς ἐννοοίας φεύγομεν, πολὺ πρότερον τὰ ἐργα παραπτομέθα. Οὐ γὰρ (ἔν) μελέτη λόγων ἀλλ’ ἐπιδείξει καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ ἔργαν τὰ ἡμέτερα.
22 Ibid., 34,2-3 (198-200): ἀτμούντες καὶ τὸ ποιητὴν τοῦ θεοῦ καλόν... κακίζοντες οἱ μοιχοὶ καὶ παιδερασταὶ τοὺς ἐυνούχους καὶ μονογάμους.
physical eunuch (the context does not support this interpretation) but rather a "spiritual" eunuch, simply the male equivalent of the untouched female virgin. He uses it to underscore how Christians "exercise the greatest care . . . on behalf of those to whom we apply the names of brothers and sisters . . . that their bodies remain undefiled and uncorrupted." These apologists thus used the figure of the eunuch to project a very different image of Christian sexuality against the prevailing suspicions of their time.

But while apologists may have found this image rhetorically useful for depicting Christian moral integrity to outsiders, many Christians were dismayed to see it take physical form among themselves. The notoriety of Origen’s alleged self-castration (ca. 209) is a case in point. When, despite his care to conceal the act, it became known to his Christian community, the bishop Demetrius responded with worried ambivalence: though admitting the "zeal and sincerity of faith" it exhibited, Demetrius "marveled at [Origen] exceedingly for his rashness." According to Eusebius the bishop eventually found it a useful basis of slander against Origen, and later Origen himself advised young men not to go so far in their "fanciful fear of God and unmeasured desire for self-control." Perhaps remembering the reception of his own self-castration, he warns that those who do so will only "subject themselves to reproach, perhaps also to ignominy, not only from those alien to the faith, but even from all those who usually forgive the deeds of men" (i.e., fellow Christians).

Indeed, the tacit approval with which Justin regards his Alexandrian youth is exceptional in the extant Christian sources. The second/third century apocryphal Acts of John presents another young man who, upon converting 23 Ibid., 32,5 (196).

25 Origen, Comment. in Matt. XV 1, ed. E. Klostermann – E. Benz, in Origenes Werke 10 (GCS 40; Berlin 1935) 349: φαντασία φόβου θεοῦ καὶ σωφροσύνης ἁμέτρῳ ἔρωτι.
26 Ibid.: ἕκαστοι ὑποβεβλήκεσον ἀνεδιασμῷ, τάχα δὲ καὶ οἰκίσχην . . . καὶ παρά τοῖς πάσι μᾶλλον τοῖς ἀνθρωπίνοις πράγμασι συγγνώσκοσιν. Later in the commentary he contrasts his former literal interpretation of Matt. 19:12 with his later spiritual interpretation: Ἡμεῖς δὲ Χριστὸν (τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ) "κατὰ σάρκα" καὶ κατὰ τὸ γράμμα ποτὲ νοήσαντες, "(ἄλλα) νῦν οὐκέτι" γινώσκοντες, οὐκ εὐδοκοῦμεν ὡς καλῶς ἔξειλήροι τοῖς καὶ τὸν τρίτον εὐνοοῦσιν [of Matt. 19:12] ἑαυτοῖς προφάσει τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐπάγουσιν, ibid., 3 (GCS 40, 354). I am therefore inclined to accept Origen’s self-castration as historical fact, a νεανικόμα he later renounced. Eusebius clearly believed its historicity, but presents it as a conscientious attempt to avoid slander: below, n. 63.
to Christianity, “took the sickle and cut off his private parts.” When he ran to John to show what he had done, the apostle displayed little charity toward the man’s first act as a Christian: it was rather “the devices of Satan” that had made him “cut off [his] unruly members as if this were a virtuous act.”

But despite John’s assurance on this point, neophytes in the early Christian centuries may well have had trouble discerning which ascetic acts had the approval of God and which were the “devices of Satan,” or exactly what limits should be placed upon their zeal for ἐγκράτεια. Until the limits of “orthodox” theory and practice had become established, widely disseminated and enforced, such zealots received very different signals as to what they should do with this particularly problematic area of the body. The anti-heretical works of Irenaeus, Clement and Epiphanius amply exhibit the sheer variety of Christian speculation on, and experimentation with, their corporeal status between the second and fourth centuries. Different groups sanctioned different acts. However, although acts of self-mortification became mostly associated with unorthodox Christian teachers, it is important for our understanding of the phenomenon of self-castration to see that these were not its only recognized proponents. In response to men who had “dared to castrate” themselves, Origin makes a studied appeal in his Commentary on Matthew against the influence of non-Christian texts which are able to incite a “more fervent soul” towards “this sort of rashness.”

He cites a passage from the Maximus of Sextus, “a book borne in esteem by many,” urging its reader to “cast away every part of the body that misleads you to a lack of self-control, since it is better for you to live without the part in self-control than to live with it to your peril.” Origen states that Sextus has “provided an inducement” for self-castration by writing, with apparent allusion to medical amputation, that You may see men cutting off and casting away parts of their body in order that the rest may be strong; how much better to do this for the sake of self-control?

Origen also cites Philo’s treatise The Worse is Accustomed to Attack the Better as a provocation towards the act, since Philo there asserts “it is better to make oneself a eunuch than to rage madly for unlawful sexual intercourse.”

—

28 Comment. in Matt. XV 3 (GCS 40, 354): ἐσταθεκάμεν τοὺς τολμήσαντας καὶ ἐντετεῦχεμεν τοὺς δυναμένοις θερμοτέραν κινήσας ψυχήν (καὶ πιστήν μὲν, οὐ λογικὴν δὲ) πρὸς τὸ τοιοῦτον τόλημα.
29 Ibid., (354-55): Φιλό δὲ Σέξτος ἐν ταῖς Γνώμαις, βιβλιώφ φερομένῳ παρὰ πολλοῖς ὡς
The influence of precepts such as these would have been reinforced by the association of eunuchism, literal or figurative, with outstanding members of the Christian community. After all, if a teacher as revered as Origen was believed to have castrated himself, or a figure as revered as Melito, Bishop of Sardis, was referred to as “the eunuch, living wholly in the Holy Spirit,” or if such an epithet could appear on a Christian gravestone, and self-castration had already been a technique of long-standing in non-Christian devotional circles, it is not so surprising that many young Christians, “young men hot with the faith” who “possess a passion for self-control, though not according to knowledge,” thought it admirable to use a knife or sickle in the service of their zeal.

In Origen’s view, such youths simply acted out of a combined “fear toward God” and naivete with respect to the true meaning of the scriptures. For Tertullian and the author of the Acts of John, however, self-made eunuchs represented something more sinister. As Tertullian’s association of eunuchs with a Marcionite conception of God makes clear, by the third century

As in inscription #11 (from Laodicea Combusta) dated between 323 and 350 by W. Calder, “The Epigraphy of the Anatolian Heresies,” in W. Buckler – W. Calder, eds., Anatolian Studies Presented to Sir William Mitchell Ramsay (Manchester 1923) 90-91: [ὁ δείκτα υἱὸν] Ἀὐρ. Ἀπάξ πρεσβυτέρῳ (1) ὁ εὐνόουχος ... μῆνης χάριν. Calder’s assertion that εὐνόουχος should be interpreted literally may be questioned, since it may have been used here to describe Appas’ celibacy (or spirituality: he was married) as it apparently was used to describe Melito’s.

Basil, writing near Phrygia, suggests the affinity of Christians who castrate themselves with the “Greeks in the past,” i.e., the Galli of the region: Φειδερὸν γάρ, ὅτι διαμονος μεθοδεία τὸ ἔργον· διότι ο ὁ μὲν πάλιν βίος παρ' Ἑλλάς τούτους, νονὶ δὲ παρ' ἡμῖν ἀτόπος ὑπεδείξει, De virg. 62 (797A).

Origen, Comment. in Matt. XV 3 (GCS 40, 355): θερμόν μὲν τῇ (δὲ) πίστει νεωτέρων, οἷς ὀμολογεῖν χρὴ ὅτι ἔρωτα σωφροσύνης ἔχουσιν “ἀλλἠ ὃς κατ’ ἐπίγνωσιν.”

Ibid., 1 (349): ἀπὸ φοβοῦ μὲν τοῦ πρὸς Θεόν, ἀνεπιστημονικὸς δὲ. Also see below, n. 43.

Ad. Marc. 4,11, ed. A. Kroymann (CSEL 47; Wein 1906) 451: Marcion’s God con-junctas non admittit, neminem tингuit nisi caelibem aut spadonem. Spadonem however may not mean here a man who has castrated himself. Tertullian himself distinguishes the celibate...
critics perceived the act as emblematic of a specific theological orientation and attitude towards material creation which not only effected the way a person viewed marriage, but also how he perceived his corporeal status. In other words, self-castration became associated with the “dualist” doctrines espoused by Marcion, Tatian et al., which tended to denigrate the body as the nagging link between the human soul and the evils they believed inherent in the material world. Unfortunately their teachings allegedly conducive towards self-castration can only be read in the fringes of the discourse of more “orthodox” writers, especially in their discussions of Matthew 19:12. There Jesus himself presents the figure of the eunuch as a religious ideal for his disciples:

There are eunuchs, that were so born from their mothers’ womb; and there are eunuchs, that were made so by men; and there are eunuchs that have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven.36

Whatever Jesus had intended by this utterance, its radical suggestion begged either literal practice or hermeneutic revision among subsequent Christian thinkers and practitioners. It is in fact one of the few gospel passages that may be read as an exhortation to asceticism or a basis for a hierarchy of Christian practitioners: “Not all men can receive this saying, but they to whom it is given . . . he that is able to receive it, let him receive it.” Certainly Origen’s characterization of the soul of the self-castrator as πιστὴν μὲν, οὗ λογικὴν δὲ suggests that the gut reaction of certain Christians to this passage was to “make themselves a eunuch for the kingdom of heaven.” However, none of the exegeses that have come down to us advocate a literal interpretation of the passage.37 On the contrary: the more “orthodox” writers used exegesis either to moderate corporeal asceticism or check it completely.

Clement of Alexandria, whose early third-century Miscellanea preserves the earliest known attempt to interpret Mt. 19:12, exemplifies this. According to Clement, the followers of the second-century Christian teacher Basilides believed the passage signified three types of celibates: those “by nature,” i.e. by an innate revulsion toward women; those “by necessity,” certain 36 Matt. 19:11-12: ὁ δὲ ἐὰν αὐτοῖς, ὁδὸν πάντες χαρόδους τὸν λόγον τοῦτον, ἄλλα ὀίς δὲ δεδομένη, εἰτὴν γὰρ εὐνοοῦσίν, οὕτως ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ μητρός ἐγκυνθήσαντας οὕτως, καὶ εἰτὴν εὐνοοῦσιν οὕτως εὐνοούσαν ἑαυτοὺς διὰ τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν. ὁ δυνάμενος χωρεῖν χωρεῖτο.

---

37 Baur, op. cit., provides a general discussion of early references to Matt. 19:12.
Though Clement criticizes other attitudes the Basilidians supposedly held about marriage, he does not specifically criticize their interpretation of Matthew; indeed their equation of the third type of eunuch with celibacy by “reasoned principle” seems to accord with his own view that “one man may make himself a eunuch [i.e., remain celibate], another join in marriage to have children; both ought to have the aim of remaining firmly opposed to any lower standard.” Nevertheless in other instances Clement deradicalizes the third type of eunuch even further, in order to affirm the Christians’ right to marry against the objections of certain “high strung” Christian teachers who found in the scriptural eunuchs (including, besides Mt. 19:12, those of Isaiah 56:3: “Let not the eunuch say, ‘Behold, I am a dry tree.’ For thus says Jehovah of eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and hold fast my covenants: . . . I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off”) their justification for promoting total sexual abstinence. Clement says that such teachers (particularly a certain Julius Cassius, who had written a work entitled On Continence or On Eunuchism) “through continence, euphemistically blaspheme against creation and the holy creator.” Rather than interpreting scriptural eunuchs as symbols of sexual continence, Clement argues instead that “a eunuch [as in Is. 56:3] does not mean a man who has been castrated, or even an unmarried man, but a man who is unproductive of truth,” who nevertheless observes God’s precepts and so attains “higher esteem than those educated in word alone without right conduct.” While Clement affirms that “those who have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven” are “blessed,” he glosses Mt. 19:12 to mean those who are “free from all sin by their abstinence from the world.”

---

39 Ibid., 3,12,79,3 (231): “Ἡ προθετις τε ἐκάστου, τοῦ τε ἐαυτοῦ εὐνοούσαντος τοῦ τε αὖ γὰρ διὰ παιδοκοιαν συζεῦξαντος, ἀνένδοτος πρὸς τὸ ήττον διαμένειν φειλέλει.

40 Ibid., 3,5,40,2 (214): τὸ ὑπέρτον ζηγνικά, ἐγκεκτεῖσαν διὰ δυσσεβίας . . . καταγέλλουσι . . . 3,6,45,1 (216): Τοὺς δὲ εὐνόμους δι’ ἐγκρατείας ἀσβεούσιν εἰς τὸν κτίσιν καὶ τὸν ήττον δημιουργόν. On Julius Cassianus and his work, see 3,13,91-92.

41 Ibid., 3,15,99,1 (241), refuting Cassianus’ use of Is. 56:3 with Mt. 19:12 (see 3,13,91,2) through allegorical exegesis Clement divests the eunuchs of Is. 56:3 and Mt. 19:12 of any sexual significance: rather than legitimizing an “impious” stress on sexual abstinence, for him they simply represent abstinence from the immoral trappings of “the world” in general.

With this shift Clement represents a distinct break from previous writers, who all had referred to the eunuch specifically as a symbol of sexual continence. His effort to free the figure of all physical implications was perhaps calculated to appeal to the clergy of his era, recruited from married Alexandrian householders. Such a social concern may have also accompanied the theological objections towards self-castration voiced by Church authorities of the fourth century, by which time an ascetic movement that included not merely renunciation of marriage but also extreme forms of self-mortification had become influential and widespread in Christian communities. To judge from the sources, the numbers of Christians who had castrated themselves had by that time become rather conspicuous. In addition to the testimony of Basil who, as quoted above, was alarmed by the spread of “many such men” in the Church, Epiphanius of Salamis observed by 377 that “not a few” monks in Egypt had “dared to make themselves eunuchs.”

He describes one Transjordanian sect, the Valesians, who are all castrated except for a few... when they take someone as a disciple, as long as he has not yet been castrated he does not partake of animal flesh. But once they have persuaded or forced him to be castrated, then he partakes of anything whatsoever.... They not merely discipline their own this way, but often impose the same on strangers passing through, entertained by them as guests.

---

Brown, op. cit., 58.

43 De fide 13.5, ed. K. Holl – J. Dummer in Epiphanius 3 (GCS; Berlin 1985) 513: ęteroi δὲ καὶ οὕτως ἐνυψυχήσαντες ἑαυτούς... δὴ ἦσσαν νεανικώτατος χρόνον ἐκλίμνον. An early Latin apophthegm (“PJ” 15.88; PL 73.968-969) tells how Epiphanius confronted two monks who aemulationem autem habentes sociis evangelicae, sed non secundum scientiam, cas-traverunt se quasi propter regna coelorum.

Epiphanius adds that “most of these Valesians had been in the Church up to a certain time, until their madness spread, and they were expelled.”

Thirteen years later John Chrysostom inveighed against those who had mutilated themselves around Antioch.

The practice of self-castration thus persisted despite its condemnation in early Church regulations. Both the Council of Nicaea (canon 1, 325) and the authors of the Apostolic Constitutions (canons 22-24, drawn up perhaps at Antioch, ca. 380) banned such men from entering the clergy; the latter also punished the laity who castrated themselves with three years’ excommunication. The Apostolic Constitutions clearly articulate the belief that self-castration stemmed from a view of the material world deemed heretical: “Let not one who has mutilated himself become a cleric: for he is... an enemy of God’s creation.” Thus the Church came to turn against Christian eunuchs the charge Athenagoras had made against pagans for “dishonoring God’s fair craftsmanship.” Self-castration, always a mark of alterity, had become an indication of heretical sympathies within the Church. John Chrysostom calls such eunuchs “men who scorn God’s creation,” and assimilates them to Manichaeans, whom he accuses of self-castration as well.

44 Pan. 58,1,4-7, ed. K. Holl - J. Dummer in Epiphanius 2 (GCS; Berlin 1980) 358: εἰς δὲ πάντες ἀπόκοποι πλὴν ἀλήγον... καὶ ὡς αὐτὸν κατασκευάζον εἰς μεθετείν, καθ’ ὅσον μὲν χρόνον οὕτω τῶν μοριῶν ἀπετυμῆθη, εἰμνύγχον οὐ μεταλαμβάνειν ὡς αὐτὸν δὲ πείσως τὸν τοιοῦτον ἡ μετὰ ἁνάγκης αὐτὸν ἀποτέμωσι, τότε πάν ὑπὸ τῶν μεταλαμβάνεις ὡς ἡ ἐκτελεσθείς άγνοοι καὶ μηκέτι ἐπικίνδυνοι ὥς εἰς τὸ ἐποτρύνεσθαι διὰ τῶν ἡδονᾶς τοῖς ἕνδον ἤκπεισθαί εἰς ἔπιθεσις, οὐ μόνον ὃς τούς ἀδιός τούτον ἀκάταξιν τούς τρόπον, ἀλλὰ πολλάς καὶ τοῖς παρευρομένους καὶ παρ ἄυτοις ἐπιξενοθήντας ταύτη διεθέντο τῇ ἄγωσι. Trans. F. Williams, The Panarion of St. Epiphanius of Salamis II and III (Leiden 1987) 99, who notes that Epiphanius’ sources are oral (98 n. 1).

48 In cap. V. Ep. ad Galat. comm. 3,717 (PG 61, 668): τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δημιουργίαν δια-
Matthew 19:12 presented early Christian apologists and teachers with a vivid image that might designate a Christian elite, singled out as “those to whom it is given.” Since Jesus did not clarify what characteristics—physical, moral or intellectual—the figure of the eunuch signified, it posed a challenge for exeges to determine these themselves. For the more “orthodox” authorities, self-made Christian eunuchs represented the most dire consequence of literal-minded, “heretical” hermeneutics, especially those which legitimized a harshly corporeal mode of asceticism. Indeed it seems appropriate that John Chrysostom addressed this practice in his Commentary to Galatians. In Galatians Paul tells how he debated whether circumcision should be required as a mark of Christian faith. Paul argued that, by virtue of their baptism in Christ, Christians no longer had to apply the commandments of the Torah to themselves literally, and therefore did not have to undergo physical circumcision. The relevance of Paul’s hermeneutic position to the later issue of self-castration is made explicit by Origen in his Commentary on Matthew. Citing II Corinthians 3:6, Origen states that Paul’s dictum that “The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life” must certainly be applied in an interpretation of Mt. 19:12. Not to do so, Origen asserts, is to adhere to the teaching of Marcion, who claimed that scriptures ought not to be interpreted allegorically. Two hundred years after Paul the areas of the body had slightly changed, but the issue was still the same; and instead of Jewish Christians representing the other side of the debate, that position had become identified with heretical Christians.

\[\text{Comment. in Matt. XV 1 (GCS 40, 351): To ypawwa å1tOK'tEÍVEt, 'to 6k 1tVE1>JlCt iovio 8E xai T(OV )CaTa TOY 1tPOKE1JlEVOV tpÓ1tOV opoa.oynieov. 51 Ibid., 3 (356): Et1tEp w dtic6kouOov 6c Mapxiwv xExoiqKE (pdotccov JlT¡ 8ew YOPF-iv,r?v ypaoqv. 5' The problem of self-castration did not end in the fourth century: cf. Rule #55 of the fifth-century monastic rules attributed to Rabbula: “No one of the sons of the church, those upon whom the name of the Messiah has been called, shall dare to castrate himself” (trans. A. Voöbus, Syriac and Arabic Documents regarding Legislation Relative to Syrian Asceticism [Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile 11; Stockholm 1960] 49). See also idem, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient 2 (CSCO 197; Louvain 1960) 257-58; Nilus of Ancyra, Ep. 1,323 (PG 79, 200A); Cyril of Scythopolis, V. Sabae 41.}
3. Self-Castration and Social Relations of Male and Female Ascetics

Basil’s treatise on virginity, however, attests that self-castration involved other issues besides theology. His discussion of eunuchs is mainly concerned with the practical matter of the danger they posed to virgins. He thus places the phenomenon of self-castration in a social context similar to that which raised suspicions among pagans: namely, close relations between male and female virgins. This issue received considerable attention from Church fathers, and suggests other motives behind the practice and prohibition of self-castration.

In Galatians 3:28 Paul presents his audience with the potentially revolutionary notion that Christianity had obliterated traditional social boundaries: “There can be neither Jew nor Greek, slave or free man, male or female; for you are all one in Jesus Christ.” By the mid-second century communal travel and cohabitation between the sexes had become a feature of certain early Christian communities, premised by a mutual commitment to chastity. But like their pagan critics, few Christian writers appear to have believed men and women could share such companionship without succumbing to sexual temptations. A late second/early third-century treatise addressed to male and female virgins reflects such doubts. Its author cites evil rumors and reports concerning shameless men who, under the pretext of a fear of God, have their dwellings with maidens… and walk with them along the road and in solitary places alone, a course which is full of dangers, stumbling blocks and pit-falls, nor in any respect right for Christians and those who fear God to conduct themselves.

---

52 De virg. 64 (800B): Διὸ εἶπεν σκοτὸς ἐστὶ τῇ παρθένῳ ἑωθορον ἐκτιθη τὴν ἔνδον παρθενίαν φυλοξαι, ἀκριβούτω καὶ τὰς πρὸς τούτους [i.e., men who have castrated themselves] δὲ ὀμιλίας. For general discussion of Basil’s treatise, its audience and social context, see Elm, op. cit., 113-24.

53 Brown, op. cit., 92-102; Elm, op. cit., 47-59, 184-223.

54 E.g., Epiphanius, whose allegations against the “Encratites” are similar to those lodged against Christians in the Octavius: Pan. 47,3,1 (GCS [1980] 218). Clement’s account of the apostles’ missionary conduct (Strom. 3,6,53,3; GCS 52, 220) illustrates an orthodox ideal for male-female ascetic relations. He imagines these couples traveled together, but were married; were married, but lived as brothers and sisters; instructed men and women, but males instructed males while females instructed females ἡ τοῦ κυρίου διδασκαλία.

55 Ps.-Clement, Ep. 1 ad virg. 10 This section of the treatise (originally written in Greek) survives in a Syriac text ed. T. Beelen, PG 1, 402A, whose Latin trans. (superior to that in PG) appears in F.X. Funk, ed., Patres Apostolici 2.2 (Tübingen 1913) 8:
The third and fourth-century phenomenon of the virgines subintroductae, the spiritual female friends and students of certain male ascetics and clerics, seems to have been a survival from such communities of travelers (and didaskaleia) of an earlier period. Eusebius records a letter describing the actions of a council at Antioch (268) brought against Paul of Samosata who, besides teaching objectionable doctrine, was known to keep such women in his household; his presbyters and deacons allegedly kept such company as well.\(^56\) Cyprian addressed a similar situation at Carthage, ca. 250. There women, despite the fact that they once made the firm resolve to preserve their chaste status, have subsequently shared the same bed with men... while insisting on their virginity.\(^57\)

Cyprian laments that "so many men" and "very many virgins" have been corrupted by "unlawful and perilous associations of this kind."\(^58\) Other Christian authorities shared his distress. The councils of Elvira (canon 27, 306), Ancyra (canon 19, 314) and Nicaea (canon 3) reiterate the same position: "It cannot be permitted to either bishop, priest or any other cleric to have in his house a female companion, with the exception of his mother, sister, aunt of such persons who are free from all suspicion."\(^59\) Repeated prohibitions against this arrangement demonstrate its continuing appeal at the time of Basil's treatise.

The situation prompting Basil's discussion of self-made eunuchs was that of Christians who had castrated themselves precisely "in order to obtain

---

\(^56\) H.E. 7,30,12.

\(^57\) Ep. 4,1,1, ed. G. Diercks (CChr.SL 3B; Turnhout 1994) 17.

\(^58\) Ibid., 4,2,3.

\(^59\) Nicaean Council, canon 3 (Hefele-Leclerq, 536-37). The Ancyran canon (ibid., 321) prohibits virgins from living as "sisters" with anyone (not just clerics).
license for themselves" since "they want to live with women" without danger or suspicion. Basil’s testimony for such a motive is supported by isolated cases mentioned by Palladius, Eusebius and Socrates. Palladius records the vision of an Egyptian monk named Elias who, being especially φιλοπόρθενος, built a monastery on his property to care for wandering virgins. But tempted by desire, he withdrew to the desert and prayed either for death or the removal of his passion so he could care for the women κατά λόγον. In response two sympathetic angels held down his arms and legs while a third castrated him: "thus . . . in his vision he was, one might say, thoroughly restored." Elias then safely lived another forty years ministering to female ascetics, "assuring the fathers that passion did not arise" in his thoughts thereafter.

Although Elias’ castration occurred only in a vision, the tale indicates how some men found in castration both a solution to the problem of prolonged exposure to the opposite sex and a means of explaining how they could live with women chastly. Eusebius presents Origen’s self-castration as an attempt to avoid the slander of non-Christians which might have arisen "because, though young in age, he discoursed on things divine not only with men, but with women." Socrates reports that Leontius, an Arian presbyter at Antioch in the early fourth century, was motivated to castrate himself "in order to remove all suspicion of illicit intercourse with a woman named Eustolium, with whom he spent a considerable amount of his time." After castrating himself, "he thenceforth lived more freely with her, since there was no longer any ground for slander against her." Each describes different instances of castration, but they share the recognition that those castrated believed this act allayed any suspicion about sexual impropriety as they taught, cared for or lived with chaste women.

50 De virg. 64 (800D): εἰρήκαμεν . . . περί τῶν ἵν᾽ ἐξοικοίν έκαυτοίς πραγματεύσανται, ός θέλονταν ὁμολείν γυναῖξν, ἀποκομνεμένων άτόπος.
51 H.I. 29, ed. C. Butler in The Lausiac History of Palladius (Text and Studies 6; Cambridge 1904) 84-85.
53 H.E. 6,8,2 (SC 41, 95-96): διὰ τὸ νέον τὴν ἡλικίαν ὅτα ἡ ἀνδραία μόνον, καὶ γυναῖξ ὑπὲ τὰ θεία προσμυλεῖν, ώς ἂν πάσον τὴν παρὰ τοῖς ἀπόστοις αἰσχράς διαβολής ὑπόνοιαι.
As Aline Rousselle observes, “In ancient times as in our day, there was a tendency to ignore or forget the fact that men who have no testicles still possess sexual powers.”65 Just as an Elias could be “persuaded” that he had been “relieved” of his “passion” by his vision of castration,66 so was popular belief apparently persuaded that a man who had been castrated could be a safe companion for virgins. Because of the prevalence of this belief Cyril of Alexandria, in an early fifth-century homily Against Eunuchs, sternly warned wealthy members of his congregation that the eunuchs whom they trusted “to sleep with their women as guardians” really offered only “semblences” of self-control.67 This trust extended all the more to Christians who had expressly become eunuchs “for the kingdom of heaven.”68 Basil’s discussion is designed to dispel such naivété. Such men, he writes, being unable to control themselves, and fearing they might be caught in the act, wholly liberate themselves for sexual intercourse by cutting off the evidence of this activity, that they might act on their desire as they wish. . . .69

Drawing on a background in medicine, Basil differs from all other writers on this subject in that he supports his case with medical theory, describing in detail how pent-in sperm boils up in the eunuch and torments him until he finds relief. By cleverly using his apparent impotence as “bait” to deceive a woman, he can gain easy access to her chamber and have sex with her without restraint. As proof Basil relates two cases known to him where eunuchs had seduced women, including a “virgin of the Church,” in this manner.70

65 Rousselle, op. cit., 123 n. 65.
66 H.L. 29 (Buder, 85) πέπεσυμα ἀπηλλάθη τοῦ πάθους.
68 As attested by the third-century De singularitate clericorum 33 (ed. G. Hartel [CSEL 3,3; Wein 1871 208-09] which denounces self-made eunuchs as heretics, but not as unchaste; they at least exhibit superior chastity than clerics who, living with virgins, claim to be spiritual eunuchs—in confusionem spadonum non dubito meliores adserere, qui nec sibi quidem parant.
69 De virg. 61 (793B): Οὗ δυνόμενοι γὰρ κρατεῖν ἑαυτῶν, εἶτα φοβούμενοι φοροθῆκαν ἐκ τοῦ ἔργον, ἵνα ἐξερχόσι οὖσα βούλοντα τῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ κεχρησθαι . . . ἀποκόλλοντες τὸν ἑλεχθὸν τῆς ἐνεργείας, ἐλευθεραίοντον ἀκρατῶς πρὸς τὰς μίξεις.
70 Medical explication: 61, 796AB; “bait”: ibid.: δέλεαρ δὲ τῶν διόρων εἰνοχισάν τῇ γυναικὶ εἰς ἀπάτην δείνως ποιησάμενος, ἀκολαστότερον μίγνυται (see also 796D); case studies: 796B, D.
Basil's main point is that self-castration, though it might appear to signify self-control, is in reality a deception (in Cyril’s phrase, a σωφροσύνης διήθειν ἰνδάλαμα). Such men are all the more insidious and dangerous because they appear to be emasculated. Basil counters that, as a bull is still a bull whether it has horns or not, so a man “who has cut off all his genitalia, does not become a woman by the loss of these; he is still by nature a man.” The success of this deception upon both men and women in Christian communities called for expose. Yet Basil and Cyril were not the first to warn against equating castration with chastity. Already in the second and early third century the non-Christian writers Artemidorus and Philostratus associated false chastity and untrustworthiness with the ambiguity of eunuchs’ sex. Thus Artemidorus considered the Galli, eunuchs and impotent men the kinds of people (along with actors, sophists and poor men) one ought not trust: “even if they do not say anything, they indicate false expectations, since by nature they cannot be numbered among men or women.” Philostratus’ digression on eunuchs in his Life of Apollonius bears remarkable similarity to Basil’s. While Apollonius’ companion Damis naively assumes (“it is obvious to any child”) eunuchs to be sufficiently chaste to enter women’s apartments “since the operation of castration has deprived them of having sexual intercourse,” Apollonius contends that “even eunuchs feel desire” and cannot be said to possess σωφροσύνη merely by virtue of castration, since this “consists not in one’s not giving in to sexual intercourse when aroused with desire, but in abstinence and appearing superior to this madness.” These authors, by calling the eunuch’s physical condition to be a deceptive signifier, broke the conventional wisdom of their day; their point had to be reiterated all the more in a Christian milieu whose tradition had long associated eunuchs with chastity and was still developing its monastic institutions.

About twenty years after the Council of Nicaea banned men who had castrated themselves from the clergy, another council met at Gangara in 71 Ibid., 63 (797CD): ἀλλ’ ἐτι ἐρασίν ἐστι τὴν φύσιν, κἂν μὴ ἔχῃ τὰ μόρια.

73 V. Apollon i 1,33, ed. V. Mumprecht (Munich 1983) 100-102: Damis: τούτῳ . . . καὶ παλιδί δήλον· ἐλεπόθη γὰρ ἡ τομὴ τὸ ἀφροδισιατέων ἀφαρέεται σφάς. Apollonius: καὶ εὐνοῦχοι ἔρθουσι καὶ τὸ ἐπιθυμητικόν, ἢπεὶ ἐκάθισαν διὰ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν, οὐκ ἀπομαραίνεται σφάς . . . οὐκ ἂν μοι δοκῇ τοὺς εὐνοῦχοὺς ποτὲ ἐς τὰ τῶν σωφροσύνων ἠθεὶ προσγράψαι . . . σωφροσύνη γὰρ τὸ ὄρεγόμενον τε καὶ ὀρμύντα μὴ ἠττᾶσθαι ἀφροδισιῶν, ἀλλ’ ἀπέχεσθαι . . . τῆς λύτης ταύτης.
central Asia Minor to judge what they considered ascetic improprieties espoused by Eustathius of Sebaste. Among the practices the council condemned were those physically altering the appearance of female ascetics "under the pretense of asceticism": "Women now assume men's clothes," the council charged, "and think themselves justified thereby; nay, many shave their heads under the pretext of piety." Though the reasons it considered these acts objectionable are not made explicit, they appear to have touched the same nerve that was sensitive to the male practice of self-castration. This is further indicated by the later Life of Euphrosune of Alexandria. Euphrosune secretly shaved her head and put on a monk's habit to gain access to a local monastery. At the monastery gate she presented herself as a eunuch and was accepted as such to pass many years in the company of the monks. Euphrosune had symbolically castrated herself. Though, unlike the eunuchs Basil condemns, Euphrosune is depicted as being innocently motivated by piety, her act was a deception nonetheless, and in the end she is revealed to the sympathetic monks as the woman she remained all along. Indeed, as Church fathers had long recognized, no bodily mark could guarantee chastity. At Carthage Cyprian had warned that even physical examination of a virgin could prove nothing, since the hand and the eye of the midwives may frequently be mistaken, and, besides, even if she is found to be an unsullied virgin in her private parts, she could have sinned in some other part of her person which can be sullied and yet cannot be examined.

The integrity of the hymen on the female body, like the absence of testicles on the male, could not be acknowledged as a valid proof of chaste conduct when men and women mingled in Christian communities. Watchdogs like Cyprian and Basil were all the more wary of such corporeal signifiers precisely because they were so widely accepted as valid. Far safer, Cyprian writes, that male and female virgins remain separate.

77 Ep. 4,3,1 (CChr.SL 3B, 20-21): nec aliqua putet se posse hac excusatione defendi, quod inspici et probari possit an virgo sit, cum et manus obstetricum et oculus saepè fallatur. Et si incorruta
The early Christian fathers were challenged as to whether they would accept a literal rendering of Matthew 19:12 as the “greatest demonstration” (to use Eusebius’ description of Origen’s self-castration) “of faith and at the same time of self-control.” The Church ultimately rejected its validity for both doctrinal and social reasons. In the course of its fourth century debates concerning the definition of “orthodox” Christianity, and in the canons regulating proper Christian behavior, the Church increasingly established itself as the successor to the polis and its norms. A figure that was once used to signify the virtuous alterity of Christian communities to non-Christians became a figure of suspicious alterity within the orthodox Church itself. Radical manifestations of an ideal de-sexualization, whether realized by communal cohabitation of the sexes or by the physical act of self-castration on the part of certain individuals, became a “heretical” threat to the orthodox community. Whatever credit was given to Paul’s affirmation in Galatians 3:28 that “there can be no male or female” in Christ, it was the apparent intention of orthodoxy that women remain marked as women, men as men, readily identifiable as such and separate.

Graduate Group in Ancient History & Mediterranean Archeology, 341 Dwinelle Hall, University of California, Berkeley, CA 94720-2600

---

invenla fuerit virgo ea parte qua mulier potest esse, potuerit tamen et ex alia corporis parte peccasse quae corrumpi potest et tamen inspici non potest. Separation of sexes: 4,2,1.

78 H.E. 6,8,1 (SC 41, 95): πίστεως γε μην ώμου καὶ σωφροσύνης μέτατον δεῖμα περιέχον.

79 I would like to thank Susanna Elm, the late Amos Funkenstein and Bill North for their constructive criticism on this paper.